Little Talks

Big Subjects:

Brief, snappy news items—all readers like them, seek them, are disappointed when they do not find 'em. Did you ever stop to think of the extremely great news importance of the hundreds of separate items which constitute The Times' classified pages each day? Did you ever stop to think that nearly every single one of these little items tells a brief, pointed, human-interest story—that the hopes and anxieties and fears and wishes of this great city are bound up with these pages of classified ads. each day? Firms seeking employes, the unemployed seeking work, home-seekers in search of a fireside they can call their own, business men seeking to dispose of their business establishments, articles of all kinds and descriptions offered for sale, flat and apartment dwellers in their tireless search, large real estate developments which are transforming wild hillsides and meadows into homes and gardens and orchards, little announcements regarding horses, and birds, and dogs, and automobiles, and boats and what not-and even then the kaleidoscopic character of the human quality of these pages is barely reflected. Read them, study them. Once you get the habit, you will never cease.
